Death of John Walter Hendley. Mr. John Walter Hendley died last

Monday night in Washington, D. O., of a stroke of ap plexy.

Mr. Hendley was an old resident of Washington and well known in govern-mental circles. For a great many years he was employed by the Agri-cultural Department and the National Museum in making was models of fignres, fruits and other objects. Mr. Hendley was so proficient in this art that he was regarded as being without a peer. His production were so life-like and so true to nature that it was often impossible to identify them as he elisted in the navy for the war with Mexico, and was on the flagship Ohio covered he made his way to the mines, and in 1855 started home overland with $110,000. He was very unfortuhowever, and in two years after his fortunately gotten under control and the order for Richmond aid was counnate in the investment of his money.

He enlisted in the Confederate army and in 1862 after being discharged on account of ill health, made his way to Washington and began to model wax flawers.
